"This new report sounds an alarm that impacts the entire global health community. HIV and TB are partners in crime with TB being the leading cause of death among people living with HIV. Now is the time for our leaders to be standing strong behind global health investments. If we do not continue to invest, three decades of remarkable progress in the fight against AIDS will be in jeopardy. And that will have a resounding effect across the global health spectrum."

Eric Goosby, Special Envoy on Malaria and former U.S. Global AIDS Coordinator

"Science has made remarkable contributions in the global HIV epidemic, among them impressive global progress towards the elimination of HIV in new-born babies. To defeat AIDS, we need to re-double our research efforts to create new and better prevention and treatment methods, strategies for sustainable implementation and, eventually a cure."

Salim S. Abdool Karim, Chair of the UNAIDS Scientific Expert Panel and a co-author of the report

"It's imperative that donors and providers work together to create a viable and efficient business plan to ensure we can test, treat and maintain HIV/AIDS treatment and prevention for all people, in all countries around the world."

Nancy Mahon, SVP of Global Philanthropy and Corporate Citizenship for The Estée Lauder Companies, and Global Director of the M•A•C AIDS Fund

"This report testifies the importance of keeping HIV and AIDS response on the post 2015 health agenda while promoting a holistic approach. This has also been the approach of the World Council of Churches. While substantial progress has been made towards zero new HIV infections, zero discrimination and zero AIDS-related deaths, the report shows us that more work still needs to be done among the key populations. The report singles out the adolescent girls who are at the top list of the at risk group. The faith communities need to ensure that the sex education that we are offering this age group is informed by evidence, accurate and complete in order to protect life in our quest for justice and peace."

Isabel Apawo Phiri, Associate General Secretary of the World Council of Churches

"The Lancet AIDS Commission Report highlights a series of new options that could dramatically cut the number of new HIV infections and change the course of the epidemic over the next decade and a half. It illustrates the concrete ways for funds to be raised to pay for high-impact strategies, in which badly affected low- and middle-income countries take on an increased financial responsibility while donors continue to support these burgeoning home-grown efforts."

Robert Hecht, Managing Director at the Results for Development Institute and one of the authors of the report
